Navy to Reduce Fleet According to Fund Slash

Washington, Oct. 31 —(P)— The navy is going to lay up to 31 warships and 42 other vessels, to keep within the reduced sums it will have to spend.

The "mothballing" program, announced last night, is part of the effort to hold the total spending on the armed services to $13,00,000, 900 in the fiscal year which begins next July 1. That sum compares with $15,585,863,498 voted by congress.

By next July the navy expects to have 237 combat vessels in operation as compared with 268 on September 1. The fleet will be reduced by four aircraft carriers and the craft which support them. Most of the reduction will be in the Atlantic fleet. Essex class carriers (27,000 tons will be reduced from five to three, smaller carriers of about 14,000 tons will be increased from three to four and the small "jeep" escort carriers will be reduced from seven to four.

The two developments could happen today.

Secretary of the Navy Matthews has indicated that he would submit his nomination for a new chief of naval operations to President Truman and Secretary of Defense Johnson at the earliest possible moment. Johnson was out of the city over the weekend while Matthews mulled over the problem.

The only hint of what had been offered Denfeld in a meeting between the admiral and secretary on Friday was contained in Matthews' comment to reporters that the new assignment would "not Johnson was out of the city over the eadmiral and secretary on Friday was contained in Matthews' comment to reporters that the secretary said nothing about the proposed job.

If Sherman is picked for the post of chief of naval operations, it would mean that he would be jumped over the heads of nine vice admirals senior to him.

But Sherman had qualification not possessed by any but one of the nine — he is an air officer. With present day emphasis on naval carrier task forces as the keystone at the fleet, this was important. The only other officer senior to Sherman who is a naval aviatior is four-star Admiral Arthur W. Radford, commander of the Pacific fleet. And Radford was, like Denfled strongly critical of Pentagon policy and the present operation of the service unification program.
